Analysts at Motilal Oswal say that DMart's everyday low pricing (EDLP) model is being replicated aggressively by most players (online as well offline retailers), compelling the firm to keep prices down significantly. A recent survey by analysts at Edelweiss had found that DMart continued to offer the lowest price in most food and grocery categories, implying it wasn't prepared to cede ground to players such as Reliance Smart and Big Basket.

"On an aggregate basis, a typical consumer basket at DMart comes at a 10 per cent discount to the most expensive seller," Edelweiss said in a recent report. "Moreover, among the 27 items surveyed, we found that offline businesses like DMart sell products cheaper compared to online platforms such as Big Basket and Amazon Pantry. Nearly 52 per cent of the 27 items are cheapest at DMart, followed by 15 per cent at Reliance Smart," the brokerage said.
